The Lincolnshire Co-operative was from its very inception built to be more than just a business, involving a co-operative movement involving a non-profit, rich tradition, the co-operative movement, its origins, and the ideals behind it. Elizabeth Maggie Phillips, who intended to take part in the movement, wrote about it:

Co-operative Games

In his book from 1908 titled The Game of Labour, Alan Middleton writes: “The controls and hygiene measures which we have today in the Co-operative Movement were not invented, but these have been adopted as a matter of course, and the movement has been able to make great progress in health and hygiene, as well as in every other direction.”

In his book from 1938 titled Homo Ludens, Johan Huizinga talks about play and the rich heritage of the co-operative movement. The collaborative action-

The Lincolnshire Co-operative was one of the leading co-operative societies not only in the town but across the county and nationally. The Lincolnshire Co-operative Society in 1861 and it was founded in 1861 on the initiative of Thomas Parker, a joiner from Gainsborough, with a group of about 20 members. The Lincolnshire Co-operative was from its very inception built to be more than just a business, involving a co-operative movement involving a non-profit, rich tradition, the co-operative movement, its origins, and the ideals behind it. Elizabeth Maggie Phillips, who intended to take part in the movement, wrote about it:

The following is a narrative on the co-operative spirit:

Cooperative Games

The Lincolnshire Co-operative was one of the leading co-operative societies not only in the town but across the county and nationally. The Lincolnshire Co-operative Society in 1861 and it was founded in 1861 on the initiative of Thomas Parker, a joiner from Gainsborough, with a group of about 20 members. The Lincolnshire Co-operative was from its very inception built to be more than just a business, involving a co-operative movement involving a non-profit, rich tradition, the co-operative movement, its origins, and the ideals behind it. Elizabeth Maggie Phillips, who intended to take part in the movement, wrote about it:

The following is a narrative on the co-operative spirit:

Cooperative Games

The Lincolnshire Co-operative was one of the leading co-operative societies not only in the town but across the county and nationally. The Lincolnshire Co-operative Society in 1861 and it was founded in 1861 on the initiative of Thomas Parker, a joiner from Gainsborough, with a group of about 20 members.

The following is a narrative on the co-operative spirit:

Pleasant Air

The Lincolnshire Co-operative was from its very inception built to be more than just a business, involving a co-operative movement involving a non-profit, rich tradition, the co-operative movement, its origins, and the ideals behind it. Elizabeth Maggie Phillips, who intended to take part in the movement, wrote about it:

The following is a narrative on the co-operative spirit:

Co-operative Games

The Lincolnshire Co-operative was one of the leading co-operative societies not only in the town but across the county and nationally. The Lincolnshire Co-operative Society in 1861 and it was founded in 1861 on the initiative of Thomas Parker, a joiner from Gainsborough, with a group of about 20 members.

The following is a narrative on the co-operative spirit:

Pleasant Air

The Lincolnshire Co-operative was from its very inception built to be more than just a business, involving a co-operative movement involving a non-profit, rich tradition, the co-operative movement, its origins, and the ideals behind it. Elizabeth Maggie Phillips, who intended to take part in the movement, wrote about it:

The following is a narrative on the co-operative spirit:

Co-operative Games

The Lincolnshire Co-operative was one of the leading co-operative societies not only in the town but across the county and nationally. The Lincolnshire Co-operative Society in 1861 and it was founded in 1861 on the initiative of Thomas Parker, a joiner from Gainsborough, with a group of about 20 members.